LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

July | August | 2019

Hi Charlotte,

In this issue of My City Magazine, we walk you through the new location of Tommy's Pub and champion the recent battle of beloved local, photographer, Deborah Triplett. As always, Martin "the Clown" Barry, gives us his comic strip "Micro Monsters" and his advice column "What do I know, I'm just a Clown". He always includes tips on not being a jerk. Thank us later. See if you can find "Frogboy" in the comic series by John Burgin in each installment and let our resident mixologist, Sabrina Hayko, introduce you to Murto Made Distillery with two of her signature drinks. Also meet the glorious Ivey in this Pet Profile. We hope you enjoy this issue and thank you for reading. PET PROFILE

Ivey

Hello. My full American Kennel Club name is Absolutely Divine. My friends call me Ivey. I am a Whippet from Sugar Valley Farm in Georgia. I am currently residing in Charlotte, North Carolina. My mother is Absolutely Unanimous and my father is Pinnacle Tennessee Whiskey; both award-winning, show dogs. Although my father has won more than twenty "Best In Show" awards, including "Best In Show" at The National Dog Show in 2018, I knew my destiny was different.

Having moved from a farm to a city, I have adapted very well. I joined a Community Stream Cleaning and Native Plant Restoration group, which inspired me to adopt my own Center City Street to clean, as well. My future goals include working with local and state officials to bring attention to missing sidewalks and truncated dome mats. I would like to share my hangout hot spots, but I break leash laws due to my formal training and "recall is outstanding", if I may quote a local board member of The National Audubon Society. I will share that Auntie Syl, of AlphaHound Pet Sitting, will not allow me to break any laws. I love and give her full trust over my daily needs.

This summer, I do have big dreams of catching squirrels, hiking, taking naps, and visiting my all-time favorite person, Auntie Heather, at her new farm. I have traveled to six states in my short life, encouraging me to secure a full-time photographer. To view my digital life, visit IveyTheWhippet on Instagram. Here, you will see I am simply your average teenager showcasing my best life, whilst running at top speed, frolicking in nature, shaming Litter Bugs, and working angles for selfies. When visiting me on Instagram, feel free to follow or comment, but please note that the only humans I follow are dog humans; such as my former handler Justin and (his) Snoop Dogg.

If you see me around town acting as if I could win "Best In Dog Park", say hello. Most importantly, thank you My City Magazine for this feature. It makes me feel welcomed to Charlotte, making my move Absolutely Divine!

TOMMY'S PUB

by: Ellen Gurley

The owner of Tommy's Pub, Jamie Starks, had to say goodbye to the first location (at 2007 Central Avenue) in 2016. Originally owned by Tommy Karras, then Jim McNally, for whom Starks worked for about ten years, the first building was sold. Folks were angry. They blamed gentrification. Those were both logical responses. Starks, however, just focused on finding a new space in which to reopen. In 2017, with his partner, Stacy Badger by his side, he did just that. Selecting the corner unit in the strip of Eastway Crossing Shopping Center, they are back up and running. If you patronized the first one, you'll recognize a lot of the décor and the faces. (Make shure to check out the bar which features a collage of pictures by Tricia Coyne's. Her book "Last Call" showcases decades of customers and was assembled and resin-covered by Heather Alexander and Tyler Broome.) The 3124 Eastway Drive (Suite 710) reincarnation has more free parking than any other music venue in town and NEVER charges cover affording you the opportunity to easily see local acts in an intimate environment that a lot of people call "home".

Jason Renegar, of the Flight Risks, tells My City Magazine, "I love Tommy's! Jamie, Stacy, and all the folks there are the real deal. For a smaller venue, we always get a big show feel with the intimacy of a good old family pub.

Even when we aren't playing, they are welcoming and accommodating. Feels like home."

Mark Ervin of Boron Heist is a legally blind musician in town that says "I have tons of positive things that I could say about that place. It has the most handicap accessible floor plan (of any other venue I play), the parking and entrance are great, and they have the most outgoing bartenders / operators around. It is a very welcoming pub where multiple subcultures can come together as one. Jamie and Stacy are awesome people and they run a very nice tension-free mingling spot. It feels less like a business and more like a community. You feel less like a customer and more like a participant (in something wonderful)."

"Tommy's Pub makes me feel like I'm home," Tiff Tantrum of No Anger Control says. "I feel safe and cared about as soon as I cross their threshold. Jamie and Stacy are truly there for this community. We are blessed to have them!"

Mark Lynch, the booking agent for Tommy's Pub, simply says that it is "one of the last old school dive bars." I know he meant in Charlotte, but I think I have seen a lot of nationwide venues with a quaint atmosphere fall to the wayside as larger ones come in. Starks is constantly celebrating his neighbours like VisArt Video. He loves what is happening in that area and genuinely wants you to come check it out. You can often see one of the owners of the EastSide Local Eatery, another business in the strip, in there. Brenda Lee Gambill says that she loves the fact that she is a part of this community. "Tommy's is a local treasure. Jamie runs a comfortable place to unwind. (They have a) great staff with good live music regularly."

Here's the deal. Y'all get mad about old places getting plowed, yet I've yet to see most of y'all at (the new) Tommy's Pub. Are you still championing the Thirsty Beaver for staying put and continuing to wave their proverbial middle finger at all of the growth around them? That's a good reason to go visit Tommy's. Were you scared you were going to lose the World Famous Milestone Club recently? Then you get it. Go to Tommy's. Are you still supporting Amos' after they have moved multiple times to stay open? Yep, I'm going to say go to Tommy's. Were you crushed when you lost the Double Door Inn and Philosopher Stone?

You should probably GO TO TOMMY'S. This writer and so many more individuals can say that this is their favourite place to catch a show. You should join them there.

ASK THE CLOWN

What do I Know? I'm just a Clown :
May | June 2019

"Ask the Clown" : an advice
column by The Clown

Q

Dear Clown,
I am trying to convince my aunt that she is living in a toxic situation. When she attends any family gathering, her fiancée always becomes the loudest and keeps her subdued from any conversations. They also leave when he says it is time and they seldom say good-bye to everyone. She is currently financially trapped by this man, as well. We have not seen him be physically abusive, but we have noticed a change in her behavior. How can we help get her out of this?
Sincerely, Concerned Niece

A

Dear Concerned Niece,
From what you have written, I can gather that you are close with your aunt. Recruit one other person that she trusts and have a gut-level conversation with her. Tell her what you see, listen, and then determine actions to move forward. She may be in a sort of rut that is allowing her to accept this behavior now, or she may feel stuck and abandoned. This conversation will clarify that. I am hoping that your family will support her through any needed changes.
Abuse is never needed, The Clown

Q

Dear Clown,
I was out last night and noticed an acquaintance was at the same restaurant. I went over to say hello and saw that he had a woman with him at dinner. I introduced myself to her and joined my group again. The trouble with this is that it looked like a romantic dinner and this man is currently living with, and involved with, one of my dear friends who would have been working night shifts at the hospital. I have yet to talk to either of them about this and I wonder if I should.
Sincerely, Suspicious

A

Dear Suspicious,
This is troublesome. On one hand, you could ask the guy about it and gauge his reaction to see if it was

Q

Dear Clown,
The family that lives across the street from me includes two children that are often playing in the front yard. Recently, I have noticed some bruising on their arms and legs. Thinking that they may have just been bruised from playing, I kept an eye out and I make a point to talk to the kids when they are outside. As some bruises faded, others would appear. The latest was a bandaged injury on the younger one's forehead. When I asked what happened, the child shied away and stopped talking. Am I seeing abuse?
Sincerely, Protector

A

Dear Protector,
The story you are telling has the earmarks of abuse. An anonymous report to child services would be helpful. Even if you are wrong, it is the right thing to do. Call.
At all costs, The Clown

THINGS I SHOULD NOT HAVE TO TELL YOU

1. People are going to hurt your feelings. Be prepared for it and brush it off.
2. Your opinion matters when people ask for it, otherwise, keep it inside.
3. Be inclusive.
4. Shatter negative presumptions as often as possible.
5. Everything is not a crisis.

DEBORAH TRIPLETT

by: Ellen Gurley

It's far from difficult as a journalist to NOT insert yourself in the subject's narrative, especially when you own the fluffiest of advocacy publications in town and you only print editorials. That being said, it is about to get warm and it is going to be fuzzy. I have known Deborah Triplett for many years and for all of which, I wanted to be(come) her. I am quite the wanna be. She is the epitome for empowerment of the less represented, the embodiment of community stewardship, and she possesses a creativity and drive to be marveled.

One afternoon, before my shift was about to end for the day at 300 East Restaurant, Deborah walked in. This wasn't uncommon at all, however this time was different. As I was seating her and her brother, Ricky, I was about to ask her how she was, but she had little, or no, poker face that day. She leaned in and told me that she just found out that she had Cancer, prefacing it with don't tell anybody. I was frozen, but mentioned something about modern medicine miracles or some crap. I had three shifts drinks that day.

For weeks, she waited until she was ready to share with the world. At which point, the outpouring of love was so generous that I almost drowned-ed from the waves. I, too, waited, until she told her story and other media outlets celebrated her. One quote stuck with me and I believed every ounce of its sentiment. In April, she told www.CharlotteFive.com that she was going to "kick its *ss (no matter) what(ever) it takes". Back in February, Emma Way, editor of www.CharlotteMagazine.com, said "Triplett is battling Cancer with an army of pearly whites-and winning." I knew she was right. Getting wind that she HAD indeed kicked its *ss was the best news I'd heard since... I literally don't know.

I reached out to a few of her amazing local colleagues. A few were shook (like something had "happened"). I realize now that I should have lead with that. Her tribe is huge, but I am lucky enough to have caught up with, and also know, a few of them. "I am glad that Deborah is still with us. She has been very ill with Cancer. She is a fantastic gardener. Magical even." musician and activist Phoenixsong Alysia Stellamaris shared with My City Magazine.

Sought-after stylist and make-up artist, Kymm McLayne, had to say that "Deborah is the epitome of an artist with an open mind and heart. She's a fearless force AND a vocal voice. Whether she is defending, advocating, or conquering social injustice, her sense of equality is only surpassed by her bad*ss style."

I met Deborah when she was working at the magazine SKIRT and I was at a visitor publication (TRIP). I loved everything about SKIRT and fell in love with her photography on the spot. I was lucky enough to have had a post-pregnancy, breastfeeding (gasp) photo shoot with her. I won a raffle for the Light Factory, which many of you would not know about, if it weren't for her. (Spoiler: it is a photography studio with which any Charlotte resident should become familiar. Also, she invented www.YardArtDay.org, which is every year here in Charlotte on Labor Day. She rallies residents to erect ANY type / medium of art in their yards. The locations are mapped out pre-event upon registration and you can make an entire weekend out of enjoying the installations. You're welcome.)

Tom Hanchett, everyone's favourite historian, echoed this in saying that "Deborah Triplett's Yard Art Day is brilliant on so many levels. It says that art is about DOING, not just displaying. It says art is not merely the province of curators and colleges, but belongs to all of us. DO art ... in public." (Editor's note: Ugh, his words are so much better than mine.)

One My City Magazine employee wanted in on the article, upon hearing what was on the desk for this issue. Mandi Brown, resident health nut, tells us that she "met Deborah many years ago whilst sitting at the bar of Pewter Rose. I knew who she was before I approached her. Most people in Charlotte know Deborah. She is an intricate and purposeful part of our artistic landscape. When I approached her and told her I was a hair and makeup artist and that I love her work, much like a star-struck fan, she was so kind, appreciative, and humble. Since that day, we have kept in touch. She has even photographed me and my son and we have spent some lovely, quality time together."

"One of the best moments was attending last year's Yard Art Day "live art" wherein a houseful of women dressed up as the Handmaid's Tale cast." Mandi continues, "I was filled with pride as we walked out in silence. A crowd of people, including the local news, were standing out front to see it. All I could think was, Deborah can make some amazing magic happen. She REALLY made people show up. She is one of my favorite people in Charlotte, compete with a smile and laugh that will fill a room and (take up space in) your heart." Crap. And I thought I had a girl crush on her. Calm it, Mandi.

When I ask people about Deborah Triplett, majority of folks don't really mention her professional accomplishments, just the ways that she betterers our region and, in turn, the world. They just want to speak to her character and that speaks volumes of who she is as a person. "Deborah shares her view of the world through her heart's filters: grace, beauty, compassion, and love. She's a kind soul and a champion of equality. When I think of DT, I see her brilliant smile and her gorgeous, red lips." Kelly King, longtime friend of hers and realtor at www.SavvyCharlotte.com tells me. Heck, everyone loves her. If this isn't a living case of "love wins", I don't know what is.

- Not the end. That new beginning / happily ever after, tho.

MURTO MADE DISTILLERY BB'S BOOZIE & NUTTY NIGHT CAP

Craft Cocktail Recipe

by: Sabrina "the Lady Beans" Hayko

When I began my adventure with My City Magazine, I stumbled upon an amazing product: Nut Crackin Amaretto. It changed how I viewed Amaretto and I decided it was time for me to meet its maker, Tony Curella. This journey took me to Murto Made Distillery in Huntersville for a sit down with Tony and owner/head distiller Jon Murto. Stepping into the tasting room takes you back to the prohibition era with its dark walls and velvet furniture; quite a cozy place for a chat about booze. Tony was a military man. Upon leaving the Air Force, he moved to Wisconsin to get into the artisan cheese business. When it came time to retire, he and his wife were trying to decide if they should move to Arizona or North Carolina. Luckily for us, they chose North Carolina.

Tony first learned how to make moonshine from his brick mason. After a brief stint in that business, he decided to focus on cordials, due to the momentum of the craft cocktail movement. This is when he walked into Murto Made for a tasting and met Jon. They tasted each other's products and decided to make magic together. With so many fabulous products coming out of one building (vodka made with bourbon mash, whiskey, bourbon, Tony's cordials in peach and citrus, plus, my fave, the Amaretto, with spiced rum coming soon) it only seemed right to make more than one drink. They open the distillery for tours and tastings every Saturday from 12-5pm, so pop in and tell the boys that I sent you!

BB'S BOOZIE

In your blender:

- 5 strawberries
- 1 peach cut up
- 1/2 oz. lemon juice
- 1.5 oz. Murto Made Vodka
- 2 oz. Carolina Craft Fuzz Bustin' Peach Liqueur
- A hand full of ice

Blend until smooth. Enjoy on the hottest day

NUTTY NIGHT CAP

In a shaker:

- 1 egg white
- 1 oz. lemon juice
- 2 oz. Carolina Craft Nut Crackin Amaretto liqueur

Wet shake (that means with ice) long enough to cool the drink, but not water it down. Strain ice. Dry shake to create froth. Pour into a cup. Dot the top with Woodford's Spiced Cherry Bitters
