LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

SEPTEMBER | OCTOBER | 2025

Hello, Charlotte and surround. Thank you for indulging us and checking out this issue of My City Magazine. As always, in each issue, you will find an exhaustive event listing: everything from our Panthers, Hornets, and our Checkers to live music and the arts. See also that the season is now for haunted attractions, so our resident Clown is happily providing a go-to list for that. He also has an advice column and a comic strip, Micro Monsters. This issue's "not-so-hidden gems" features Mad Jack's, Mama Bessie's, Berrybrook Farm, and Park Road Books. See also our farmers market and farm list (at some you can pick your own pumpkin). Our resident comic book nerd, John Burgin, gives us an article on Levi Erickson, author/illustrator, musician, and public school teacher. And the cover features Carolyn Barber of Reggae Central and an article on her beautiful store. We hope that you enjoy it and also hope y'all have a beautiful fall.

Enjoy today and every day,

LEVI ERICKSON

BY: JOHN BURGIN

When I think of the name Levi Erickson, it conjures up thoughts of a broad-chested, red beard who is sailing a boat on treacherous waters toward an ice-covered village besieged by a great dragon. A red bearded, "giant of a man" with massive, tattooed forearms and chains sewn into leather wrist cuffs. I see him gripping his battle axe and leaping from his sturdy vessel to size up the foul, fire breathing beast. He charges forward with fierce eyes and flared nostrils leaping into the air. With one mighty swing of his trusty axe, the head of the evil monster is separated from its body and falls lifeless onto the icy ground below. The once terrified villagers emerge from their creaky, wooden cottages and erupt into cheers as they raise frothy pints of ale in boisterous celebration!!!

Ah, but you must excuse my wandering mind for a second as I come back to the present day and talk a little about my friend Levi Erickson - a slightly less barbaric, but, possibly, just as wild and, no doubt, a very interesting fellow. The Levi I've known has lived in the Charlotte area for about twenty years now; since his time as a United States Marine came to an end. You will find him at his home base, a little garage/studio/skatepark that he has dubbed, the "Asteroid M". It is a nod to the mutant, Magneto (his home base in Marvel's X-men series). Yes, Levi is a comic book nerd, but that's not all. On any given afternoon you may find him shredding his homemade mini ramp, thrashing some punk guitar tunes, or writing and drawing his original comic book series called, "The Big". It's a sort of horror story about Bigfoot folktales.

Originally born in Kansas, Levi moved with his family to Hot Springs, Arkansas and he lived out his teenage / high school years there. It was during these formative years, of the mid to late '80's, that he developed his love for skateboarding and punk music. In his words, he says, "when I see something that I like, I can't just sit back and like it, I have to try to do it, too".

He recalls picking up G.I. Joe comics, specifically issues 26 and 27 (the origin of Snake Eyes). He dove into those storylines and, captivated by the characters and the art, he began to try to draw what he saw in those stories. Levi found himself being influenced by several of the image creators at that time: Todd McFarlane, Rob Liefeld, Erik Larsen, and John Byrne.

After high school, Levi moved to California to try his luck as a musician and comic artist in Los Angeles. He remembers the grueling days of pounding the pavement; knocking on doors - just trying to score a big break in either field. Eventually, he began to miss the slower pace that life had to offer in the smaller towns and he moved all the way across the country to Maine.

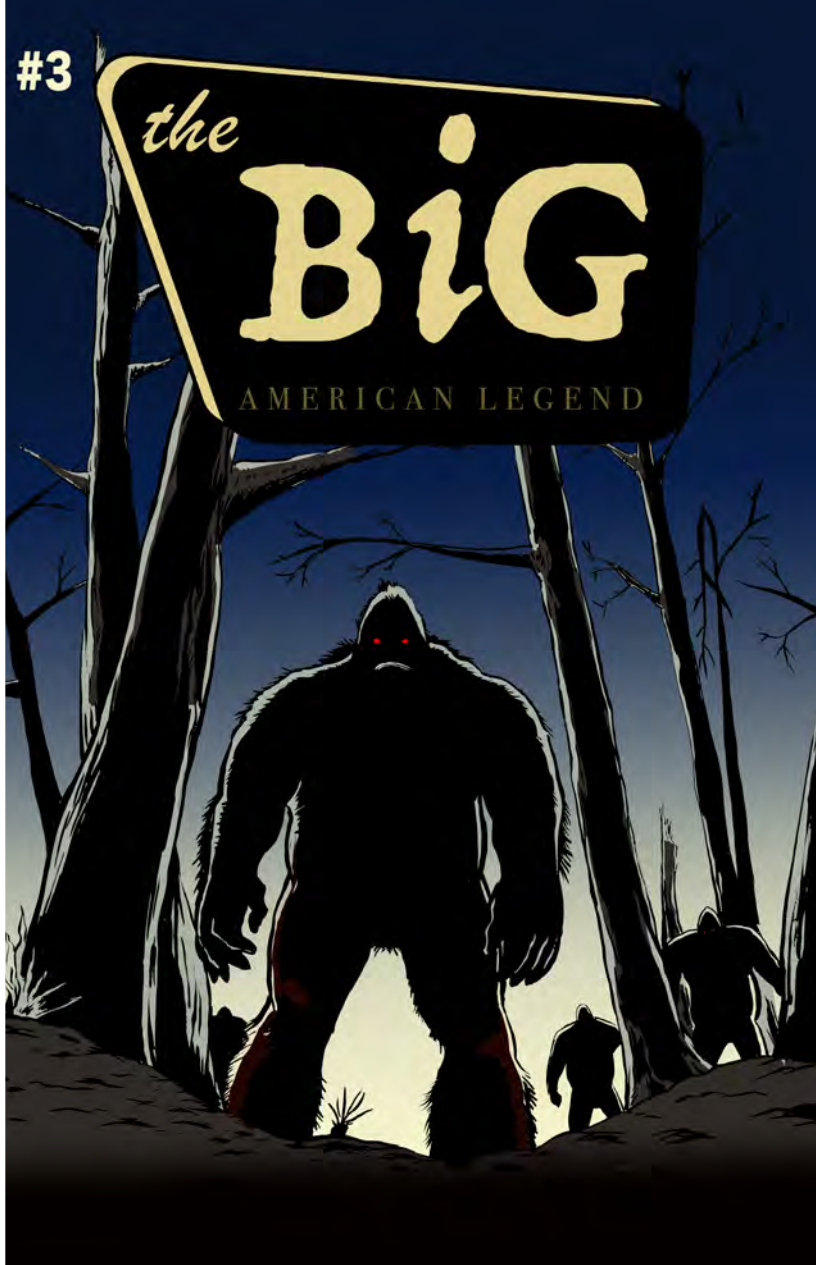

Maine was great and he fell in with a group of musicians. That project became his focus for a while. He honed his guitar playing skills on the small club circuits, but things weren't super easy.

He decided to join the United States Marine Corp. Being enlisted was life-changing, to say the least. Mr. Erickson spent a decade serving and then decided it was time for, yet, another change. He decided to move to the Charlotte area of North Carolina around 2007. He settled down and started a family. He spent some time in various jobs; including being a background/environment artist for a video game design company. (He was tasked with designing the vegetation in various landscapes in the backgrounds of video games. How cool is that?!)

Still, Levi had the desire to create his own art and write his own stories - as he has always been fascinated with the folklore surrounding Bigfoot, or, as someone who grew up in Arkansas might call it, the Fouke Monster / the creature from Boggy Creek. Erickson's stories in "the Big" focus on the folklore and asking the real questions. For instance, if Bigfoot is real, where is the proof? Why can't we find him? He also wants to explore how the local townsfolk relate to the creature plus give accounts of outsiders coming to town looking for evidence of Bigfoot's existence. He is telling these stories in 12 issues. Each of which is 12 pages in length and he is currently working on issue number four.

Creating comics is an arduous process and one still has to pay the bills and our Mr. Erickson works very hard as a teacher in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system. He teaches 3-D game design at Phillip O. Berry Academy of Technology. Dude has excelled at inspiring students and teaching them the basics AND excitement of "nerding". Just this past year, he was nominated for the Beginning Teacher of the Year Award and made it to the round of finalists. Not too shabby, if you ask me.

I met Levi, networking as a comic book writer and author myself (FROGBOY), and he is one of the nicest guys in the world - always willing to talk comics and share secrets of the trade. In fact, he even finds time to film a podcast with his good friend, Ryan Holgerson, also an independent comic book writer and author. They talk all about comics, share some of their favorite storylines, and give insight into their own processes. It's called, "Comics in the Making" and I think you should give it a listen.

Well, there you have it. My pal, Levi Erickson, may not be a village saving, dragon slaying Viking, cruising around the arctic circle, but it's my opinion that he is far more interesting than that.

WHAT DO I KNOW? I'M JUST A CLOWN

SEPTEMBER | OCTOBER | 2025

ADVICE FROM MARTIN "THE CLOWN" BARRY

Dear Clown,

I am a single mother and I love my life. I work from home and care for my toddler full time. This, however, has not always been an easy road. While I have had consistent support and encouragement from friends, my parents and siblings have less than that. My parents insisted that I should not do this alone and their communication has been sparse for over two years. My siblings follow the same pattern, but my sister seems to be communicating more lately. I am not worried about their position in this, but I suspect that my sister may be less than sincere and possibly trying to get information to report back to my parents. Should I open up?

Sincerely, Her

Dear Her,

I can completely understand the skepticism here. When we are left alone in a decision and dedicate our efforts in spite of an absence of support, we lay down boundaries that disallow depletion. In the face of this, just ask your sister directly about her motivation. If she is sincere, this will add happiness to three lives. If she betrays this, you will already know what to do.

Keep nurturing, Clown

Dear Clown,

A group of us have a friend that we suspect may be hiding a drinking problem. Her behavior is erratic and completely contradictory lately. She insists that she is not drinking, but the behaviors say otherwise. She complains about her husband but does several things to provoke his reactions every day. She began repeating things she told us only a short time ago, and she began calling some of us at late hours. We want to help, but we are not sure where to start.

Sincerely, Might Intervene

Dear Might Intervene,

From the description, your concerns may be valid. There could be some compounding factors here as well. I would start by addressing this problem alone first and bring in the rest of your friends to support as it develops. Your sincere concern for your friend is a beautiful thing and I hope she will recognize that and be honest with you and with herself. Please make sure you have all the facts and understand her position before offering anything from advice to intervention. Please also recognize that she must be self-motivated to make changes as well. I hope your care and sincerity will win the day.

Keep the kindness, Clown

Dear Clown,

My son recently purchased his first home last year. We are very proud that he has done so well for himself. My wife and I have started to wonder if there may be a problem that we have not identified. Our son will call occasionally and visit us about every three months, but he has yet to ask us to visit his place. We have been discussing all the possible things that could be causing this, and we are struggling to come up with a cause. We are certain that we did not do everything perfectly raising our kid, but we did our best. Do you think we should be concerned?

Sincerely, The Dad

Dear The Dad,

This may be one of the sweetest parental concern letters I have ever read. You have already done excellent work taking your parental efforts into consideration and putting your son first. I am hoping there is no conflict between you and your son, but nobody has a perfect record. Start by making gentle suggestions with your son. Increase communication a little bit, suggest bringing dinner over, ask if he needs some assistance with light landscaping tasks, etc. If there are refusals to the smaller efforts, be direct in discussing a root cause without escalation.

Thanks dad, Clown

Dear Clown,

I have been dating a woman for eight months and I would like to move things up a level. She is against marriage and has made this clear from the start, so I will not be asking. What I would like to propose is moving into a place together. I know that I want all the time I can get with her, and I think she feels the same way. My only concern is that she might say no. I don't want to mess up something great by doing this the wrong way. What would you advise as the best approach?

Sincerely, Wanting More

Dear Wanting More,

It is certainly wonderful that you have found someone that makes you want to alter your life. It is also good that you obviously respect her views. There are several ways you can do this. Providing some amenities at your place could be a good start. A new toothbrush, some open closet or dresser space, or special items in the kitchen or shower to increase her comfort could be a subtle start. Higher level effort could include giving her a key to your place in a gift box, but don't blow out the candles before they are even lit. It is also important to be honest with yourself if she DOES refuse and consider whether you should continue, or if you have a differing vision for what you want your life to be.

Go slow, Clown

CAROLYN BARBER: REGGAE CENTRAL

BY: ELLEN GURLEY

In 1998, I was in my third year of college at UNC-Charlotte. All of the places that I worked at the time were in town (Bayou Kitchen, Café Dada, Cigars Etc.), so, naturally, I wanted an apartment closer to my jobs. I found a one bedroom apartment behind the McDonald's on Central Avenue. When I tell you that no one wanted to live on or visit some of the streets in Plaza-Midwood back then, I'm not exaggerating. It wasn't the "cool" place to live, but I was very happy to be there. Little did I know that I would meet some of my best friends in that zip code.

As a DJ, I began doing booking at a little club called Café Bisous and bartending at Café Dada (now Dish) and was shopping at Central Records. Lin Benfield ended up hiring me as one of his buyers. Two doors down from the record store, incense filled the air and reggae music was blasting out into the streets. I wandered in one day only to meet Miss Carolyn Barber. As my boss Lin tells it, his store used to be in a storefront above the one he was in at the time of me discovering it, called Upstairs Records, opened in 1995. When he was moving underneath to a new spot, changing the name to Central Records, Carolyn signed a lease for her first location of Reggae Central. "I remember that I told her friend (DJ Ceez / Chad Blalock of Power 98) that Upstairs Records was moving to street level and our old space would be perfect for Carolyn to start her business. Building owner (George Aroba) was happy to welcome Carolyn. Later, she (also) moved street level when Aroba Tailoring closed. Carolyn believed in the neighborhood and knew how to start a business. Back then, most of the buildings and businesses were independently owned. Everyone knew each other and supported each other, for which Carolyn played a large part in making Plaza-Midwood the unique area people liked." He tells me more than once, "Carolyn is an amazing person."

The year was 1997 and soon after, other unique businesses started to open in the neighborhood, including House of Africa (still there today). For decades, Carolyn ran a successful store in the heart of Plaza-Midwood. Fellow business owner, Jason Herring of the old Milestone Records (across the street from her – where Sadu is), remembers that time as a great one for Charlotte's Plaza-Midwood. But as things go, new building owners increased the rent and many businesses had to find new spots that they could afford (Pura Vida and Soul Gastrolounge moved to NoDa, Boris & Natasha's moved to The Plaza, and Armada Skate Shop is in Camp NorthEnd). Embracing the change, Carolyn picked up and moved, too.

Perhaps you've never even heard of Reggae Central. Maybe you knew of them when they were on Central Avenue, but simply thought that it disappeared. It did not. Carolyn is celebrating 28 years of business and on her third location. When I met her many years ago, we were fast friends. Lots of people feel that way about her.

She is a pint size ball of friendliness. No one would guess that she just celebrated her 70th birthday, but as the saying goes, "Black don't crack."

Making the drive to Charlotte daily, this South Carolina gal is part of a close knit, large family. She has ten brothers and sisters AND will stand ten toes down for her chosen family, too. Carolyn can make friends with anyone. And she does that with ease. I am lucky to call her one of my best friends. I know a lot of other people feel that way and I am willing to share her.

You can often find her around town at shows with her daughter and granddaughter. If there is a reggae show in the area, she knows about it. Heck, she brought most of the artists here herself while promoting shows all over town. She basically knows all of the international artists personally. Don't wait to see her out and about, go check her out at the store. She moved almost a handful of years ago and My City Magazine wants you to know of her new location. She sells leather bags, bracelets, necklaces, djembe drums, skirts, incense, records, tee shirts, baskets, and so much more. Whenever I am in there, regulars pour in there for their shea butter and essential body oil fix (that they refuse to buy elsewhere). DJ Donny Blackaway, aka the Black Ferris Bueller, Shawn Allison can't say enough nice things about her. "What Carolyn represents is the warmth that humanity could and should have. While she is petite in stature, her heart radiates as a giant sunbeam of peace, love, and joy to all." She really is one the most genuine and kind people to know, but don't take my word for it. Meet her yourself and thank us later.
